THIS IS A DECLARATION OF A VIS-ITOR AT THE WELL.

Oliver Godery of East Liverpool, Ohio, Pro-Equal to the Product in Eastern Ohio-He Takes a Portion Home with Him for the Purpose of Chemical Examination-He Believes a Pottery at Wichita would afternoon at 5 o'clock, the recent breakage having been fully repaired, and again the great auger began its descent into the blue clay.

Among the visitors at the well yester day was Oliver Godrey of East Liverpool, O. Mr. Godrey is the chemist of the large pottery firm of Godrey Bros., of that city. The gentleman was not Interested in asphalt, diamonds, mica, pebbles, flour gold or even silver, as were many others who were separating the clay in search for valuables or curiosities. He was far more interested in the bine clay than he was in minerals. With a paddle he would spread out the He declared that the clay already discovered was a fortune in itself if prop-erly utilized, and he secured a basket of earth declaring that he would never be satisfied until he had made a thor ough chemical examination of the ciay, and also tried it in one of his klin.

Upon being introduced to the Eagle reporter by his old time friend, A. H. Jackman, and being asked to give a reason for his prediction that the clay already discovered was of sufficient value to repay the money expended in sinking the well, he said:

"It is natural for a man to look at an article with which he has been en-raged more than at anything else. Mr. Jackman will tell you that our pottery is one of the largest in the United the office in the city building and was attracted by the fine grain. "It was the grain of the clay at East

Liverpool that first attracted the attention of a company of Englishmen who were traveling through the country and the first factory was opened there in 1859. Today the ware from our city is known throughout the civilized

"I cannot say that the clay found here could be utilized for anything fur-ther than Rockingham and Yellow ware without first giving it a thorough chemical examination, but I am satisfied that it can be used for this purpose even at a less expense than we use the same class of clay in eastern Ohio. As far as the grain of the clay is concerned the Wich-its product has the advantage.

"Suppose that the clay here could be used only for tiling and crockery it would prove of more value than even coal to the city. At the present time the entire west and southwestern portion of the United States is supplied with ware from the east. On shipment of this class of goods the highest freight tariff is charged and with a factory here this would save a heavy tax upon the The demand for tiling is growing each year, and a tiling and crockery factory at Wichita should be a paying

"There is another advantage a fac-tory in Wichita would have which I don't believe is considered by persons outside of the business. In Ohio we are compelled to first dig the clay and haul to a vacant lot. There is has to be handled for one year before it is ready for use. After this it is ground and prepared for the pottery. Here I believe with the penetrating wirsis that the lumps of clay would be thoroughly slacked in thirty days instead of wait-ing a year as we are forced to do."
"But you have the advantage of cheap fuel at East Liverpool which we don't have at Wichita, and do you not think that the difference in fuel would prevent a factory here from becoming profitable?" asked the newspaper man. "I have been thinking about that very estion myself. Now that is not such difference in fuel as you might think. While we have plenty of coal near our pottery, yet it is not the proper kind and we are forced to buy and ship in a class of coal similar to the Cannon City coal you have here and it costs us over $5 per ton. I am informed that Cannon City coal can be secured here in car load lots at $7 per ton. This would be $2 per ton more than we pay, but the less expense of handling the clay more than makes the difference. You have salt here much cheaper than we have and I cannot see but what every advan-tuge we possess is more than met by an advantage peculiar to this country.

"I will take a portion of the clay home with me and after it is analized I will have it formed into various articles and send them to my friend Mr. Jackman for distribution as a momento of the pottery which furnishes over 50 per cent of the earthenware used in Wich-

"How would I proceed to get at the clay? Well, that is easy. You only have to go to a depth of forty feet to reach the clay and that is a very shallow shaft. I would dig, however, ten yesterday news from New York travel-nel out of the clay and then tunnel out of the sides. In this way you would have a sufficient roof to shut out she water of the subteranean river and the work could be accomplished at a with a strata of over 100 feet of the finest grained clay in the world lying just beneath it. It is simply immense, and I would not be surprised if a pottery would be started here within the

"I affirm that if nothing more is found than the strata of clay the auger is working in new, that is alone will prove of equal advantage to coal if only util-tzed. I think I will send you an Eagle with a copperhead snake in its claws."

no hope of drawing him out on that question at this time.

It is the remark of all that he never looked better physically and that he never appeared brighter and more at case and looked more confident in his life. His rooms have been crowded all day long with visiting members and prietor of a Large Pottery, Declares the others, and the White House at the bepresented a livlier scene.

In the list of callers today was Ben Russell, of Missouri, candidate for sergeant at arms. Twenty years ago Russell had a slight acquaintance with Mr. Reed in the state of Maine, which is the native state of Mr. Russell. When Mr. Russell met Mr. Reed this morning, the latter recognized him at once and made inquiry about old time school mates who attended a prominent school with Mr. Russell. Mr. Russell was very much surprised that Mr. Reed could recognize him after the facial changes brought by years.

While Mr. Reed is not talking about committees at this time, the old members and ranking members of commit-tees are doing all they can around among each other to get adjusted. It is the general belief that Mr. Reed will. in making up his committees, conform to the plan he followed in the Fifty-first congress, which was to promote on a basis of merit, and years of ser-vice and familiarity with the business to be handled by the respective comclay and with a large magnifying glass | mittees. Mr. Curtis is looked upon as specially fitted for the place, owing to his familiar-ity with the Indian business. It is especially fortunate for all Indian business in Oklahoma and the Indian Ter-ritory that Mr. Curtis should be at the head of the committee. NOT CRACKING LICE

JOHN J. INGALLS' CUT ING REMARK ABOUT YOUNG RALPH BURTON.

fridescent Statesman Said that the Youngster had Been Trying to Get Him to Quit Cracking Lice-It All Came Up Over a Speech Mr. Burton Made in Wichita to the Old Soldiers in which He Eulogized Jeff Davis, and which Caused

Topeka, Kan., Nov. 27.-John J. Ingalls and J. Raiph Burton, candidates for United States senator, have been thrown together a good deal lately, and appear to be on friendly terms, but the fact of the matter is that they have no earthly use for each other. They never speak from the same platform if it can be possibly avoided. Both kicked vigorously on account of the forthcoming boom meeting in Chicago, but nelther was in position to decline the invitation to make a talk for Kansas. It is expected, however,, that one of them will get his back up soon, and then the fur will commence to fly. Burton is one of the few public men who have criticised Ingalls without getting "skinned" for the pains by the sarcastic ex-senator. But Burton will come in for his share sooner or later. Ingalls never forgets. It is about time for Ingalls to draw his snickersnee, for Burton has been pounding him, off and on, for several years.

While Ingalls has never attacked Burton from the platform nor in the news-paers, he has said some mean things about him, Probably the meanest thing he ever said about any Kansas man was about Burton. He said it to a reporter at Atchison in 1893, just af-ter Memorial day, Burton delivered the Memorial day address at Wichita that year, and in the course of his remarks took occasion to criticise Ingalls severely. Ingalls made him fam-ous, and all the papers printed long piec-

In an article in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat the Sunday before, Mr. Ingalls had said:

"In the thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution are incorporated the final results of the war of the rebellion. They are its summary. These few paragraphs are the treaty between the belligerents. In them are the trophies of the victors, waged ostensibly to maintain the integrity of the union and in denial of the dogma of state sovereignty. The future historian will not fail to note that the three amendments are silent upon this subject and that two of them re-late exclusively, and the other princi-pally, to the freedom, citizenship and suffrage of the negro race. The right of secession, if it ever existed, exists now, so far as any declaration in our organic law is concerned. It has not been renounced, nor is the supremacy of the nation affirmed in its charter."

Mr. Burton read this paragraph to the audience, and then said: 'The foregoing is a characteristic statement from that remarkable man. Without discussing at length the paper of the brilliant literateur on the negro problem, it is well to state its substance Because by rounding periods and happy phrase, by an artistic blending of fallaeles and logic that is entirely natural to him, some confusion may arise to the casual reader from a perusal of his ar-ticle. Summarized the gravamen of his position is this:

"The war was ostensibly fought upon integrity of the union, but after he conflict ended and the South surrendered this position was abandoned and a trea-ty was made between the belligerents expressed in the amendments to the constitution, which treaty the South has never kept and never will keep, al-though it is right in the abstract, and hence it would be better for the North "was that I had been absent from the sinte for several weeks and did not must yet be solved, by returning him to

"What a fearful future this contemwhat a fearur future this contemplates. What an awful commentary on the past if it be true. The tears of women and the blood of men were shed in vain. But it is not true. Our women did not suffer for naught, our heroes did not die in vain."

A reporter for an Atchison paper met Mr. Ingalls on the street in that town and asked him to express himself in regard to Burton's criticism. Mr.

"This fellow Burton has been trying to get me to kick him for five years. I have resisted the temptation. I have quit cracking lice."

That was all Mr. Ingalls had to say.
It was in this Wichita speech that Burton pronounced an eloquent eulogy on the character of Jefferson Davis. which got him into so much trouble with the G. A. R. when he was running for senator last winter. It is understood that Mr. Burton's enemies in old soldier circles are getting ready to to put Burton in as bad a light as pos-sible, and likely they will butcher it again. Here is exactly what Burton said about Davis;

"The last rites are being paid to the remains of Jefferson Davis, the presi-dent and the ablest of the civic leaders of the Confederacy. It is, perhaps, too early yet to judge this man fairly and impartially, and give him his exact place in history. And the same may be said of his great opponent, Abraham Lincoln. The one is enshrined in the hearts of the people of the north as the other is in the hearts of the people of the south. Prejudice, that black stain on the soul, made by passion, has not yet been effaced against Lincoln in the south, nor against Davis in the north, teran, who, as a child, on the border of the conflict, witnessed so much suffering by his kindred and friends, have come to slowly recognize something of the better traits of the leader of the south in that bloody times, but justice compels me to say, and I believe the time has come for the great world to admit the courage, the ability and the ereignty was right and that slavery was not only best for both races, but it was established and maintained at of his great teacher. Ca the doctrine of secession as Lincoln did in the idea of Union. The beginning of the war found him at mature manhood, and in possession of the greatest honors that his adopted state could confer on one of her citizens. As a boy he had fought gallantly in the Indian wars, and afterwards retired to a life of conthe blood streaming from his body, refused to leave his battalions until their victorieus shout told the battle had been Again retiring to the shade private life, after having refused great military honors that, by his severe interpretation of the constitution, he ould not accept, was chosen by his state to the high position as legislator in the American congress.

"But the supreme moment came to Davis as it comes to us all in various ways, and under different circum-stances. Should he stand for the Union or should he cast his lot in favor of secession? Looking at him as we do today, knowing his surroundings, his teachings, and high above these, the strength of his conviction of duty, can the issue be doubtful? As well might we have expected the first proclamation of the great Lincoln after his in-auguration to have been acknowledge-ment of the right of South Carolina to secede, as to have expected that the great Davis would have favored union. With all the courage that could animate a great mind, under trials as se-vere as could come to any man, through out the entire war he did his best to maintain and support the south in her mad infatuation for secession and disunion. Grant said the war should have ended with the battle of Gettysburg. That is true, but it would have ended sooner than it did had Grant been cap-tain of the southern soldiery and Lincoin been president of the Confederacy? Davis and Lee fought on because they were Americans and because they be-lieved they were right. They succumb-ed just as the north would have done

Then the bearing of Davis during his life since the war endeared him to the south. He felt that in him was the embodiment of the lost cause; that, yielding to the inevitable, a different interpretation had been given to the con stitution from that believed in by him and by the south, and although the are scrofula in children, right of secession was forever settled as consumption in grown diers and in memory of the southern dead, he remained to the last, acting and saying, we believed in the justice

"While believing as I do that had the south secreeded the greatest barm had come to liberty and to the cause of hu-manity; that the grand destiny await-ing this people could never have been theirs; that the south was wrong, eter-nally wrong, and that the north was wright, everlastingly right—still I as firmly believe that not only was the rank and file of the southern soldlery honest and sincere in their advocacy of rebellion, but that their great leaders were imbued by a lofty patriotism, and among them all there was no more sin-cere and conscientious man than Jeffer-son Davis."

It was quickly found that the roughand-ready style of fabric would not hold air, and so an inner sheath of pure rubber was tried. The valve was vulcanized to this inner tube in such a way that in the event of any trouble with the valve an entirely new air sheath was the only remedy. Flat rims were in use at the time, and the tires were fasted to the rim by a strip of muslin which came out with the free edges from the under side of the tires. These ends were wrapped around the rim and vulcanized to it. The linen completely covered the rim, effectually concealing its material. Tires such as these were used for a couple of years. They weighed from twelve to fifteen pounds a pair, and a puncture in one of them was about as serious a matter as a broken frame is at the present time.-N. Y. Times.
